10 Idiots of a Student in Campus

About the Author

Raymond Abang is a Christian writer, intercessor, and faith encourager with a deep burden for hearts that suffer in silence. His writing flows from real experiences of waiting, pain, prayer, and hope, offering comfort to those who feel unseen or unheard.

He studied Electrical and Electronic Engineering at Heritage Polytechnic, Eket, Akwa Ibom State. Beyond academics, Raymond has devoted his life to spiritual service and prayer. He is an intercessor in the Catholic Charismatic Renewal of Nigeria (CCRN) and currently serves as the Intercessory Ministry Leader of Jesus Our Light Prayer Group, Akpajo.

Raymond believes that pain does not disqualify a person from purpose, and that God often speaks most clearly in seasons of silence. His writing reflects a heart that has wrestled with questions, waited for answers, and still chosen to trust God.

Preface

Campus life is a journey unlike any other. It is filled with freedom, excitement, opportunities, and challenges. It is the first time many students truly step out of their comfort zones, away from the watchful eyes of parents and guardians, and face life on their own terms.

Yet, freedom without guidance can be dangerous. Many students enter campus with dreams, ambitions, and purpose but by the time they reach graduation, some find themselves lost, distracted, or unprepared.

This book, 10 Idiots of a Student in Campus, is not about calling anyone stupid. It is about awareness and reflection. Each chapter explores a common trap that students fall into traps that quietly destroy potential derail ambition, and steal years of opportunity.

From the Academic Idiot who neglects studies, to the Party & Social Media Idiot who wastes time on fleeting pleasures, to the Purpose-less Idiot drifting through life without direction, these “idiots” are not people who lack intelligence. They are students who make choices without wisdom, without reflection, or without foresight.

I wrote this book to speak directly to you, the student, as a mentor, a guide, and a voice of experience.

Each chapter is designed to make you pause, reflect, and ask yourself honest questions.

Campus is more than a place to earn a certificate. It is a preparation ground for life. Your decisions here will shape your destiny. This book is a companion, a warning, and a guide to ensure that your campus journey builds the person you are meant to become.

Welcome to a journey of awareness, growth, and transformation.

CHAPTER ONE

THE ACADEMIC IDIOT

The Academic Idiot is not a foolish student by intelligence. In fact, many Academic Idiots are very smart. Their problem is not the absence of ability, but the absence of seriousness. This is the student who enters campus with excitement and big dreams but gradually treats academics like an option instead of a responsibility.

At the beginning, it starts innocently. Missing one lecture does not seem like a big deal. Skipping tutorials feels harmless. Assignments are postponed because “there is still time.” Soon, these small acts of negligence become habits. Before the student realizes it, weeks have passed, topics have piled up, and exams are approaching unprepared.

The Academic Idiot believes last-minute reading will save them. They depend on “expo,” guesswork, or copying friends’ notes. They read not to understand, but to pass. Unfortunately, campus does not reward shortcuts. It exposes them. Poor grades, carryovers, and academic probation begin to appear. Confidence drops, and frustration sets in.

Many students fail not because courses are too hard, but because they underestimated consistency. Intelligence without discipline is wasted potential. Campus is not secondary school; lecturers will not chase you. Nobody forces you to attend class. Freedom is given, but responsibility is expected.

A wise student understands that academics are the backbone of campus life. Attending lectures, asking questions, reading daily, and preparing early are not signs of being dull; they are signs of maturity. Success on campus is built quietly, one lecture, one assignment, one revision at a time.

The Academic Idiot waits for motivation. The wise student builds discipline. Motivation fades, but discipline sustains success.

CHAPTER TWO

THE PARTY AND SOCIAL MEDIA IDIOT

Campus life introduces students to freedom, nightlife, parties, and unlimited internet access. While enjoyment is part of the experience, problems begin when pleasure becomes a lifestyle. The Party and Social Media Idiot is the student who sacrifices purpose for excitement and trades growth for temporary fun.

This student plans parties better than exams. They know the latest trends, dances, and online gossip but cannot explain what was taught in class last week. Nights meant for studying are spent clubbing, while mornings meant for lectures are wasted sleeping. On social media, hours disappear without awareness.

Social media itself is not the enemy. The problem is addiction and comparison. The Party and Social Media Idiot measures success by likes, views, and online validation. They feel pressured to show a lifestyle they cannot afford. Slowly, focus is lost. Attention span reduces. Reading becomes difficult. Silence feels uncomfortable.

Over time, consequences appear. Grades decline. Health suffers due to poor sleep. Anxiety increases because life feels unproductive. Sadly, while others are building skills and knowledge quietly, the Party Idiot is busy entertaining an audience that will not show up at graduation.

A wise student understands balance. Fun has its place, but it must never replace purpose. Social media should be a tool, not a master. Campus years are too valuable to waste chasing moments that leave no impact.

Discipline is choosing long-term success over short-term pleasure.

CHAPTER THREE

THE RELATIONSHIP IDIOT

One of the most common traps students fall into on campus is relationships entered without maturity or purpose. The Relationship Idiot is not someone who desires love love is natural. The problem is allowing emotions to control decisions at a stage where focus, self-discovery, and preparation are most needed.

Many students arrive on campus emotionally vulnerable. It may be their first time away from home, and loneliness sets in quickly. A simple conversation turns into attachment.

Compliments become commitment. Before long, the student is emotionally invested without thinking through the consequences.

The Relationship Idiot structures their life around another person. Lecture attendance depends on whether their partner is available. Mood depends on text messages and phone calls. Academic focus is replaced by constant emotional engagement arguments, jealousy, expectations, and insecurity. What was meant to be companionship slowly becomes distraction.

When relationships go wrong, the damage is often severe. Breakups lead to emotional breakdowns, loss of concentration, and sometimes depression. Some students miss exams, fail courses, or withdraw socially because they are emotionally unstable. Sadly, many regret entering relationships they were not mentally or emotionally prepared for.

This does not mean relationships are evil. It means timing and maturity matter. A wise student understands that personal growth must come first. Knowing who you are, what you want, and where you are going is essential before carrying someone else’s emotional weight.

Campus is a season of preparation, not pressure. Relationships should complement purpose, not compete with it. Emotional discipline is just as important as academic discipline.

The Relationship Idiot follows feelings blindly.
The wise student leads feelings with wisdom.

CHAPTER FOUR

THE CAMPUS MARRIAGE IDIOT

Campus marriage is one of the most misunderstood ideas among students.

The Campus Marriage Idiot is not someone who values commitment, but someone who enters marital responsibilities without readiness. Love alone does not qualify two students to live like a married couple.

Many campus marriages begin with good intentions. Two people care deeply for each other and want to prove seriousness. They move in together, share expenses, and start living as husband and wife yet neither is financially stable, emotionally mature, or mentally prepared.

Very quickly, reality sets in. Rent must be paid. Feeding becomes a daily struggle. Academic pressure increases, and emotional expectations rise. Jealousy, control, and arguments become common. Instead of supporting each other's growth, they begin to drain each other.

The Campus Marriage Idiot carries adult responsibilities with a student income. Academic performance often drops because attention is divided. Some students skip lectures to resolve domestic issues. Others miss exams because of emotional stress.

What was meant to show commitment ends up becoming a burden.

Marriage is not just about love; it is about responsibility, sacrifice, and stability. Campus is a training ground, not a settlement ground. There is a difference between preparing for marriage and pretending to be married.

A wise student understands timing. They build themselves academically, financially, and emotionally first. They prepare for marriage without rushing into it. True love is patient and understands process.

The Campus Marriage Idiot rushes. The wise student prepares.

CHAPTER FIVE

THE PEER PRESSURE IDIOT

Peer pressure is one of the strongest forces on campus. The Peer Pressure Idiot is the student who abandons personal values just to belong. This student fears rejection more than failure and approval more than purpose.

On campus, influence spreads quickly. Friends determine how you dress, where you go, what you drink, and even how seriously you take your studies. Many students do things they never planned to do simply because “everyone is doing it.” Skipping lectures, cheating, partying, drinking, and reckless behavior often begin this way.

The Peer Pressure Idiot rarely plans their life. Decisions are reactions. If friends read, they read. If friends skip class, they skip. Over time, individuality is lost. This student becomes a shadow of others, moving wherever the crowd moves, even when the crowd is lost.

One painful truth is that not everyone on campus is going somewhere. Some people are only passing time. Following such people leads to wasted years and regret. When consequences come failed courses, damaged reputation, or lost opportunities friends often disappear.

A wise student understands that courage is not loud; it is firm. It takes strength to say no when everyone says yes. Independence of thought is a mark of maturity. Choosing the right friends is choosing your future.

The Peer Pressure Idiot follows the crowd.
The wise student follows purpose.

CHAPTER SIX

THE LAZY IDIOT

The Lazy Idiot is one of the most dangerous types of students on campus because laziness hides behind excuses. This student has dreams, talks about success, and complains about hardship, yet avoids effort. They want results without responsibility.

Laziness on campus often appears harmless. Sleeping through lectures, postponing assignments, and avoiding reading seem normal at first. “I will do it later” becomes a daily statement. Unfortunately, later rarely comes. Tasks pile up, deadlines close in, and panic replaces peace.

The Lazy Idiot depends on last-minute pressure. They read overnight, rush assignments, and hope for miracles during exams. When failure comes, they blame lecturers, school system, or bad luck never themselves.

Campus rewards consistency, not talent alone. Many average students succeed because they are disciplined, while brilliant students fail because they are careless. Laziness slowly destroys confidence. Each failure makes the next effort harder.

A wise student understands that discipline is a daily decision. They create routines, manage time, and act even when motivation is absent. Hard work may be uncomfortable, but regret is heavier.

The Lazy Idiot avoids effort today and suffers tomorrow.
The wise student works today and enjoys tomorrow.

CHAPTER SEVEN

THE PROUD IDIOT

Pride is a silent enemy on campus. The Proud Idiot is not always loud or arrogant; sometimes pride appears as quiet resistance to correction. This student believes they already know enough and sees advice as unnecessary.

The Proud Idiot ignores lecturers' instructions, refuses guidance from senior students, and avoids mentors. They dislike being corrected and feel offended when advised. When mistakes are pointed out, they defend themselves instead of learning.

Pride limits growth. Campus is a place of learning, yet the Proud Idiot stops learning too early. They repeat the same mistakes because they refuse to admit weakness. Over time, opportunities are lost because teachability is missing.

No student succeeds alone. Every successful person was once a learner. Humility opens doors that pride shuts. A wise student listens, asks questions, and learns from correction.

Pride creates isolation. Humility attracts wisdom.

The Proud Idiot thinks they know it all.
The wise student knows there is always more to learn.

CHAPTER EIGHT

THE FINANCIAL IDIOT

The Financial Idiot is the student who mismanages money without understanding the consequences. This is not always because they have much money, but because they lack financial wisdom. On campus, how you handle small money reveals how you will handle bigger opportunities in the future.

Many students receive allowances, support from parents, or small income, yet it finishes within days. Money is spent on unnecessary items fashion, outings, data, food impulses without planning. Borrowing becomes normal, and repayment becomes a problem. This student lives from hand to mouth, always stressed and dependent.

The Financial Idiot chases appearances. They want to look successful even when they are struggling. They buy what they cannot afford to impress people who do not care. Over time, shame, anxiety, and pressure build up. Some students even compromise their values just to survive financially.

A wise student learns budgeting early. They understand the difference between needs and wants. They save little, plan ahead, and invest in books, skills, and personal development. Financial discipline brings peace of mind and independence.

Money is a tool, not a master. Control it, or it will control you.

CHAPTER NINE

THE SPIRITUAL IDIOT

Campus life gives freedom, and freedom exposes values. The Spiritual Idiot is the student who abandons their moral and spiritual foundation once they step onto campus. This is not always deliberate; it often happens slowly and quietly.

At home, many students were guided by parents, churches, mosques, or personal routines of prayer and reflection. On campus, no one checks. No one reminds. Gradually, prayer becomes irregular, conscience becomes weak, and values become flexible. The student begins to believe they can survive without spiritual discipline.

The Spiritual Idiot makes decisions based solely on feelings, pressure, or convenience. Right and wrong become negotiable. When challenges arise failure, heartbreak, confusion there is no inner anchor. Life begins to feel empty despite activity.

Spiritual neglect affects every area of life. Without inner guidance, discipline weakens. Temptations increase. Guilt grows. Purpose becomes blurred. Many students only realize the damage when regret has already taken root.

Spirituality is not about religion alone; it is about alignment, conscience, and direction. A wise student understands that spiritual discipline strengthens mental clarity and emotional stability. It gives strength to say no, courage to stand alone, and wisdom to choose right.

Freedom without values is dangerous. Spiritual grounding protects destiny.

CHAPTER TEN

THE PURPOSE-LESS IDIOT

All the previous “idiots” Academic, Party, Relationship, Campus Marriage, Peer Pressure, Lazy, Proud, Financial, Spiritual point to one ultimate danger: lack of purpose. The Purpose-less Idiot drifts through campus without direction. They react to life instead of designing it. Every day is a repetition, every decision aimless, every opportunity wasted.

This student has no clear goals. They study without understanding why.

They socialize without boundaries. They make choices based on others' expectations, trends, or convenience. Time passes, semesters fly, and graduation approaches with fear rather than confidence.

Purpose acts as a compass. It gives meaning to effort, clarity to decisions, and motivation to persevere. Without it, even discipline can feel meaningless. The Purpose-less Idiot may work hard yet achieve little because their energy is scattered and undirected.

Discovering purpose begins with reflection: Who am I? What do I want? Where am I going? Aligning daily actions with long-term goals transforms campus life. It shapes decisions about academics, finances, relationships, spirituality, and personal growth.

A student with purpose navigates challenges intentionally. They learn from failures, avoid distractions, and build momentum for life beyond school. They understand that campus is a training ground, not just a temporary stage.

The Purpose-less Idiot drifts. The wise student moves with intention.

Campus is a place of preparation. Live it deliberately. Protect your future. Define your purpose, and let it guide every choice.
